9 MILE
— VODKA —
GRANITE ROCK FILTRATED

The idea for 9 MILE VODKA comes from the US canyon of the same name, Nine Mile Canyon. This is where the source of its inspiration lies. This is where it was born, in the midst of the world's longest rock art gallery.

Innumerable tales of 19th-century settlers are stuck to the dusty heels of its history. They tell of people who forged a new place in which to live characterized by fields, livestock farming, and trading.

Thousands of prehistoric rock art sites stand as a testament to the past of Nine Mile Canyon. In total, the world's longest rock art gallery extends for more than 40 miles.

9 MILE VODKA and its unique product features follow in its tracks. The bottle's surface structure reflects the rugged landscape of Nine Mile Canyon with its craggy, rough rock formations.

The copper label, which sparkles in the sun, is a playful interpretation of the patina of the million-year-old rock art stories hidden in the depths of the canyon. It is reminiscent of the tanned skin of the hardworking settlers toiling away in the fields.

The dark-blue tin label conjures up images of intensive nights in the canyon. Together, the striking 9 MILE VODKA colors encapsulate the entire canyon scenery from a panoramic perspective, when sunset bathes the setting in a deep blue while the sun itself shimmers like a glistening copper ball on the horizon.

9 MILE VODKA is an homage to the place where its soul lies.

CHARLES EAMES

A bottle like a canyon. The satinized granite surface structure brings the rock formations, among which 9 MILE VODKA was developed, to life. The expressive color combination comprises a dark blue together with a sophisticated copper orange that symbolizes sunset. The embossed tin label and the copper-colored cap with top and side embossing and high-quality finishing demonstrate a flair for all things special down to the last detail.

GRANITE ROCK FILTRATED.

Connoisseurs appreciate the fitting combination of reserved aromas and distinct character. The first-class result is multistilled 37.5% alcohol. Top-notch ingredients, crystal clear water, and carefully selected types of grain flow through granite rock during its production. This unique granite filtration gives 9 MILE VODKA an unadulterated purity and an inimitably pure taste.

Its pure, soft character is already perceptible in the nose and on the lips. It maintains this class through to its mild finish, when it reveals its potential loud and clear.
